Therefore, I deem it expedient to say as little as possible in praise of myself or literary productions. Let public mind give an unprejudiced verdict, whether I shall have the freedom of this entire confederacy in introducing my work in this enlightened age of progress, and I will abide the decision of my countrymen, where it does not come in direct antagonism to the obligations that I am under to the Supreme Ruler of nations. The problem is about being solved, to prove to the civilized world whether man is capable of self-government, or national jurisprudence, in its energetic measures, is competent to triumph amid political factions; and whether our national law-givers in their collected wisdom, will meet the impending crisis with invincible prowess, and put down disunion forever, and its coadjutors as traitors to their country, branded in eternal infamy.
