Not illustrated. 1843 Excerpt: . not remember ever to have passed over fifty miles with a more entertaining companion, or with one, whose conversation was more instructive, at the same time that it was so agreeable. He informed me that the King had sent him to London expressly for Sir Astley, and that they returned together on the evening of the same day to Brighton. The King became much delighted with Mr. Cooper during this attendance, and evinced his pleasure, not only in the liberality and honours already alluded to, but also in actively promoting his welfare, by recommending him to the other members of the Royal Family, and various persons about the Court. The letters to my uncle of Sir William Knighton, whose close intimacy with the thoughts and feelings of George the Fourth is well known, always expressed this sentiment on the part of his royal master, whenever...
