Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: . . . terebeniene, and this name may be conveniently employed to designate the pinene of French turpentine oil. This variety of pinene is laevo-rotatory, while the pinene from American oil usually exhibits dextro-rotation. This difference in optical properties extends to the various compounds and polymers of the pinenes from French and American turpentine oils. Where two physical isomerides of a substance exist, the optical activities of the two varieties are usually equal and opposite. The specific rotation commonly assigned to lsevo-pinene is -40.4 (-43.4 being the greatest activity observed), while pinene from American oil of turpentine is stated to have a specific rotatory power of 21.5 for the sodium ray. From these figures it would appear that one or other of the pinenes is not a homogeneous substance. J. H. Long has proved this to be the fact with respect to the product from American turpentine...
