Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Holy America That deaf and dumb maid is a character. Deaf and dumb, yet see how nicely she waits on the table - quick, and always on the alert. If you want anything all you have to do is to stamp your foot on the floor a little; she catches the vibration, and at once surveys the table, and then you motion to her. She comprehends quickly. [Others enter - Uriel among them.] Tobey. Uriel, how do you do! You always seem to be around. Uriel. Yes, at supper time. I like to be round then best and hear the talk. I have more leisure then. In the morning I have to assist about the kitchen, helping serve, go to the store; then at noon - dinner - you are all too busy, but at supper you have plenty of time. Tobey. That s so. You may not realize it now, but later on in life-you will realize that this was a good school for you. Broadarm. Mr. Rander, did you go and see the Mermaids last night? Rander. I did; and you ought to go and see that play. It was the finest thing I ever saw. Rosecomb. That s what you said about the play last week - the Sea of Ice. Rander, Well, the Sea of Ice was a fine play, but it can t quite come up to the Mermaids. That is the finest play I ever saw. Broad Arm (aside). I suppose next week Rander will see another play, and that will be the finest thing he ever saw. [Singing in the parlor.] New England, My Country. The hills of...
